INTRODUCTION

Inaugural Exhibition

DURING the past few years the arts have become a very vital part of life. We no longer think of the Art Museum simply as a depository for things that have passed out of fashion or that are too large to be used in the home, as a storage warehouse for large paintings and sculpture, to be displayed in enormous cold and solemn halls where the few visitors speak in hushed voices and are not encouraged to pay more than one visit. Instead it is realized that the Arts are many sided and that they add interest to our daily surroundings. Museums of Art therefore are now planned to attract the young and the old, the seeker after beauty and the student, the tired man and the lonely woman, and offer to all a friendly welcome which will create a desire for frequent visits.

It is in this spirit that the Inaugural Exhibition of The Baltimore Museum of Art has been planned. Furniture and silver used by our ancestors a century or more ago can be enjoyed for their sheer beauty of form, color and pattern. The everyday metal utensils of the Hindus are full of interest to the student of Asiatic customs and the designer will find here a wealth of varied and beautiful decorative motifs. Among the etchings will be found beautiful and exquisite works by old and modern masters, the XX century work being as rich in beauty of line and in the quality of its light and shade as some of the prints executed three hundred years ago.

In the handling of water colors our American painters are displaying extraordinary ability, and the strongest paintings in this medium can be enjoyed in the small gallery with its intimate appeal. In the big picture gallery oil paintings by masters of the XIX century, both European and American, are hung side by side with the work of our contemporary American artists, forming a comparative exhibition wherein each work has a special charm of its own and each contributes some beauty to the whole. So also the sculpture, which is displayed chiefly in a garden setting.

The homes of the citizens of Baltimore contain many important works of art and the Inaugural Exhibition affords an opportunity for the general public to see and enjoy some of these treasures, thanks to the generosity of their owners. In the catalogue due credit is given under each entry in the sections of painting and sculpture. In the case of silver it has not been found practical to print the entire list. The Board of Directors extends to all the lenders, both in Baltimore and elsewhere, sincere thanks for their very generous co-operation.

Special credit is due to Mrs. Miles White, Jr. who has collected and installed the exhibit of silver; to Mr. Thomas Corner and Mr. E. L. Bryant for aid in selecting and hanging the paintings; to Mr. J. Maxwell Miller for similar work in connection with the sculpture; to General Lawrason Riggs for taking charge of the prints; to Miss Julia Rogers for help with the invitation list; and to the President and Secretary for constant advice and assistance.

Foundation of the Museum

Incorporated in 1914, The Baltimore Museum of Art was a culmination of a two year campaign by the City-Wide Congress for the foundation of an Art Museum in Baltimore. After several attempts to secure a suitable location, the Johns Hopkins University granted the request of the Museum Directors to set apart for the erection of a Museum of Art a plot of land of about four acres located at the South end of the University property adjoining Wymans Park and facing Thirty-first Street. The Garrett Mansion, overlooking Mount Vernon Place, has since been placed at the disposal of the Museum, for a limited number of years.

The house has been adapted to the uses of the Museum, equipped with the most approved type of exhibition cases and stereopticon installed. There will be permanent and loan collections of the fine and industrial arts and the most interesting exhibits procurable will be brought to Baltimore. It is hoped that a permanent collection will be built up through gifts. All beautiful things, from a few inches of exquisite lace to a masterpiece of Greek sculpture, will be accepted with equal appreciation and used to the best advantage.

Service and co-operation are the keynotes of the policy of the Museum. The Friends of Art and the Handicraft Club have established their headquarters in the Museum building; the Watercolor Club and the School Art League have become affiliated members.

The general public, the art lover, the artist, the art student, the manufacturer and the craftsman will be offered an opportunity to see here works of artistic merit in painting, sculpture, graphic arts, metal work, textiles, furniture, ceramics, etc., and every facility will be offered for study. In addition to the active educational work carried on in the Museum, traveling exhibitions and lectures will be available, under certain conditions, for use in public and private schools and by organizations throughout the city and state.

The members of the Board of Directors have been enthusiastic in their support of the whole plan and its success is due to their personal interest and co-operation.

THE engravings and etchings here shown are selections from the print collection made by the late Mrs. Marie Conrad Lehr, and named by her The Conrad Collection. Mrs. Lehr began the acquisition of prints immediately at the close of her school days and has left an intimate and interesting statement of her hopes and desires as a collector and of the emotional appeal which prints made to her.

In a foreword to the catalogue of the exhibition of her prints held in Baltimore in 1914, Mrs. Lehr wrote:

“I have chosen all my proofs because I love them, not because some are rarities and of special value; I have selected each because it pleased, and my greatest pleasure is not always appended to the ‘show pieces’ which able critics of the world have proclaimed, nor am I swayed by the desire to have a so-called ‘complete collection’ with an example of every effort that an artist has produced. On the contrary—quantity speaks no charm, but quality frames an irresistible appeal. One beautiful impression is a greater joy than fifty of mediocre tone—for only fine impressions express the undistorted intention of the artist and are art.

“There are many fine prints that I long to include and hope to gather if time and fate permit, and some of these that I already own may still some day ‘step higher’ in impression if opportunity allow. Meanwhile I wait and watch and enjoy these exquisite toys and dear familiar friends that breathe so much restfulness, inspiration and poetry.”

Mrs. Lehr provided in her will that her collection should be “preserved and cared for permanently as my gift to the City of Baltimore.” It is hoped that The Baltimore Museum of Art may soon be able to offer a suitable home for these “exquisite toys.”

METAL WORK

East Indian, Persian, Damascan, XVI, XVII, XVIII Centuries

THE teak wood carvings in Gallery C were designed by Lockwood de Forest for Miss Mary Garrett. They were made in his workshops, started in Ahmedabad in 1881 under the direction of Muggunbhai Hutheesing, son of Seth Hutheesing who built the great Jain Temple, one of the sights of India. The collection of metal work in this gallery was purchased by The Baltimore Museum of Art at the sale at auction in New York City, November 24th and 25th, 1922, of part of the collection formed by Mr. de Forest during the years that he spent in India, as the representative of the Tiffany Studios.

The metal work of the Hindus was one of the indigenous arts of India. As far back as 1400 B. C. the ancestors of the Hindus had their established blacksmiths, goldsmiths and coppersmiths. No mention of brass, however, appears before the IX century A. D. Where other people used pottery, the Hindus used metal. Nowhere else in the world did it enter into the life of the people as it did in India where it was made for religious, domestic and personal use, and not for ornament. The high standard of perfection attained is due to the Brahmanic caste system strictly adhered to by the Hindus, who followed the same craft from generation to generation.

The pieces in this collection are rich in design with a profusion of animal, floral and geometrical motifs worked out in great detail, which is characteristic of all Indian art.

These objects bear no relation to the so-called art metal work turned out by the ton at Benares during recent years, for sale in the foreign market. Machinery may add to our material well-being, but it cannot take the place of the gentle hammer taps, skillfully and patiently manipulated, which fashion a fine piece of metal work. We learn from Mr. de Forest, however, in the introduction to the catalogue of his sale, that "the art is lost. The skilled workmen are dead, and their sons, who would have continued the work, are now in the cotton mills tending spinning machines."

SILVER

THE settlers in Maryland and the Southern colonies were conservative people with traditions and good taste. Many of the families brought heirlooms with them, including especially English silver. A number of these English pieces and silver made in this country during the XVIII century have been lent by descendants and by collectors for this Inaugural Exhibition of The Baltimore Museum of Art.

The appreciation of silver made in this country during Colonial times dates back only some twenty years. The first large exhibition was held in Boston at the Museum of Fine Arts in 1906, and the introduction to the catalogue was by R. T. Haines Halsey to whose painstaking research is due much of our knowledge regarding Colonial silversmiths. Then followed the exhibit of silver included in the Hudson-Fulton Exhibition at the Metropolitan Museum of Art in New York in 1911 when the present writer prepared the catalogue with the co-operation of Mr. Halsey and Mr. John Buck. A special exhibition of the work by New York silversmiths was held at the Metropolitan Museum the same year, and the Museum has recently published "A Study of the American Silver of the XVII and XVIII Centuries Based on the Clearwater Collection" by C. Louise Avery.

Mr. Halsey, in the preface to the Clearwater catalogue, says:

"The intensity of joy at the discovery that among our forefathers were noteworthy craftsmen working in the precious metals, at first almost blinded us to the excellence of their workmanship. As piece after piece of the work of our Colonial master craftsmen came out of hiding, many of them from attic chests others from family safe deposit boxes, the splendor of the work of our early craftsmen became more and more impressive, and now a recognition of the personal touch and individualities of workmanship of many of our foremost silversmiths adds greatly to the historical interest formerly all absorbing.

“The fascinations of silver are many-sided. Naturally some pieces are of a higher aesthetic quality than others. The study of the textures is most alluring, and comparisons of the alloys of various makers show us that the textures in Colonial plate vary no less than those of the velvets and other textiles of various qualities and periods.

“The same differences apply to its forms and shapes, for in no department of arts and crafts is sense of line and proportion more necessary in obtaining that standard of excellence described in an utterance of Michaelangelo: ‘Trifles make perfection and perfection is no trifle.’”

The decoration on Colonial silver has been carefully studied by Miss Avery, and in her notes on the history and technique of American silver that precede the catalogue of Judge Clearwater’s valuable collection, lent to the Metropolitan Museum, she has traced and ascribed the origin of the decorative motives used by the early silversmiths of this country.

A considerable amount of silver was produced in Baltimore in the latter part of the XVIII century, and a few of these pieces are included in our exhibition. A special study of the early silversmiths of Maryland is in course of preparation and its publication is looked forward to with much interest. The first State law in the United States requiring a quality stamp on silver was the Maryland Act of 1814 which fixed the standard for Baltimore plate as eleven ounces of fine silver to every pound Troy (917 fine), and required that all objects be assayed by the assay officer and stamped by him as well as by the maker. For some years after the passage of this act Baltimore plate generally bore several stamps: a town mark, the arms of Baltimore; a date letter; the assayer's punch; and the maker's mark. The law was afterwards modified. The oldest existing firm in this country is that of Samuel Kirk & Son Company, founded in 1815 in Philadelphia and moved to Baltimore in 1817 by Samuel Kirk. There is therefore legitimate reason for the great interest taken by Baltimoreans in the collection of silver.

AMERICAN FURNITURE

XVIII Century

THE early settlers along the Atlantic Coast brought more or less elaborate household goods with them. English and Dutch models therefore influenced the American cabinet-makers when it became necessary to add to the supply of furniture.

At first the pieces of furniture were very simple; gradually throughout the latter half of the XVII and the first half of the XVIII centuries the workers became more and more expert and the pieces followed the European changes in style.

“During the Chippendale period, 1750 to 1775, furniture was made in the colonies which for workmanship compared favorably with any made in England. In Philadelphia high chests of drawers, dressing-tables and desks were made with scroll top and elaborately carved; while in New England low chests of drawers, chest-on-chests, dressing-tables and desks were made in the block-front type. Both of these styles are original in America and are the contribution of cabinet-makers here to the art. Pie-crust tables and well carved chairs were abundantly made here and were quite the equal of those made in England.”—From “Colonial Furniture” by Luke Vincent Lockwood.

The few pieces of American furniture in this exhibition date from the best period—the third quarter of the XVIII century. The block-front knee-hole desk is similar to pieces in the Pendleton Collection at the Rhode Island School of Design, Providence, and the Bolles Collection at the Metropolitan Museum of Art, New York. This example is notable for the basket carving and gadrooned edge in addition to the block and shell.

The pieces are lent by Mr. John C. Toland.
